01 — CAROUSEL SLIDE COPY

SLIDE 1 · COVER (Hook Slide)

Headline: "5 fitness myths that are keeping you stuck
(backed by science, not bro-science)"

Subtext: Swipe to find out which ones you've believed ■

Design note: Bold text on clean dark background. Brand accent colour. "Swipe" arrow bottom-right. Logo top-right corner.

SLIDE 2 · MYTH #1

MYTH: "~~You need to feel sore to know your workout worked.~~"

TRUTH: Soreness (DOMS) is caused by microscopic muscle damage — not growth. You can have an incredibly effective workout with zero soreness the next day. As your body adapts and gets stronger, soreness actually decreases. That's a good thing.

Bottom line: Soreness = novelty. Absence of soreness ≠ wasted effort.

Design note: "MYTH" in red/strikethrough. "TRUTH" in brand colour. One punchy fact per slide.

SLIDE 3 · MYTH #2

MYTH: "Cardio is the best way to lose fat."

TRUTH: Cardio burns calories during the workout. Strength training builds muscle — and muscle burns more calories at rest, 24/7. For sustainable fat loss, resistance training + a mild caloric deficit consistently beats endless treadmill sessions.

Bottom line: Lift to burn. Cardio to support. Both have value — context is everything.

Design note: Side-by-side or split-panel layout works well here.

SLIDE 4 · MYTH #3

MYTH: "Lifting weights will make women bulky."

TRUTH: Building significant muscle mass requires years of progressive training, a caloric surplus, and testosterone levels most women don't have. What lifting actually does: increases metabolism, improves bone density, creates a toned physique, and builds real functional strength.

Bottom line: You won't accidentally get bulky. You'll intentionally get strong.

Design note: Use an empowering image or icon of a woman lifting. Avoid stereotypes.

SLIDE 5 · MYTH #4

MYTH: "You have to cut carbs to lose weight."

TRUTH: Carbohydrates are your body's preferred fuel source — especially for the brain and muscles during exercise. Weight loss comes from a caloric deficit, not from eliminating any single macronutrient. Cutting carbs works for some because it reduces overall intake — not because carbs are inherently bad.

Bottom line: Carbs aren't the enemy. Excess calories are. Eat the rice. Train well.

Design note: Could include a visual of common carb foods (rice, sweet potato, banana).

SLIDE 6 · MYTH #5

MYTH: "No pain, no gain."

TRUTH: There's a difference between the healthy discomfort of pushing your limits and the warning signal of actual pain. Ignoring pain leads to injury — and injury leads to weeks or months off. Real progress is built sustainably, not through suffering.

Bottom line: Train hard. Train smart. Pain is not a badge of honour — it's a signal.

Design note: Use a clear visual contrast: discomfort (green) vs. pain (red).

SLIDE 7 · CTA / CLOSING SLIDE

Headline: The fitness industry profits off confusion. You deserve the truth.

Body: Save this carousel, share it with someone who needs it, and remember: simple, consistent, science-backed habits will always beat the latest trend.

CTA graphic text: SAVE + SHARE ■

Design note: End with logo, tagline, and warm brand colour. Add 'Follow for more real talk about fitness'.

INSTAGRAM CAPTION

If you've believed any of these, it's not your fault — the fitness industry profits off confusion. More confusion = more products sold. More shame = more people chasing quick fixes.

Let's clear it up. ■

- ❌ Soreness doesn't mean it worked.
- ❌ Cardio alone won't get you there.
- ❌ Weights won't make you bulky — they'll make you strong.
- ❌ Carbs are fuel, not the enemy.
- ❌ Pain is a signal, not a goal.

You deserve a relationship with fitness that's built on facts — not fear, guilt, or outdated advice that was never backed by science to begin with.

Real progress comes from understanding your body, building sustainable habits, and working with a coach or community that actually tells you the truth.

Save this post. Share it with a friend who's been misled. And if you have questions — my DMs are always open. ■

■ Save this for the next time someone tells you to cut carbs or push through the pain.

Something a little different today — let's bust some myths. ■

I've been coaching long enough to know that most people aren't failing because they lack discipline. They're failing because they've been given the wrong information.

Here are 5 of the most common fitness myths I hear — and the truth behind each one:

1. You need soreness to prove your workout worked → FALSE. Soreness fades as you adapt. That's progress, not laziness.
2. Cardio is the best fat loss tool → NUANCED. Strength training builds the engine that burns fat all day.
3. Weights will make women bulky → FALSE. They'll make you strong, defined, and metabolically powerful.
4. Cutting carbs is the key to weight loss → FALSE. A sustainable caloric deficit is. Carbs are your body's fuel.
5. No pain, no gain → DANGEROUS. Discomfort is part of growth. Pain is a warning sign. Know the difference.

The fitness industry needs you confused. I don't.

If this helped, share it with someone who needs a clearer picture of what healthy actually looks like. ■

Drop a question in the comments — I'll answer every one.
